APPENDIX A: Memorandum for Guidance of Student Publications

The Laws of Ghana

All student publications, even though they may be circulated only within a Hall or the University, are subject to the laws of the land. This memorandum is intended to give them general information about their legal liabilities. It is not a substitute for professional legal advice, and it only deals with those parts of the law which are most likely to concern student publications. However, journalists who use their common sense and the information given here should not run into legal difficulties.

1. The Civil Law of Libel

Everyone concerned with a publication runs the risk of being sued and made to pay damages if the publication libels anyone. Material published is libellous for example, if it suggests that the person has committed a crime, or is dishonest, or immoral, or not to be trusted, or has misconducted himself or herself in office. It does not have to refer to the person by name. It is sufficient if ordinary people would understand what is published as referring to the person who brings the action.

The liability is not confined to the author of the libelous article or picture; everyone on the Editorial Committee, would also be liable, and even those who take part in typing or distributing the publication may be liable as well. So, if you take any part in a publication, it is wise to realise that you are legally responsible for what is included in it, and normally it makes no difference whether you read the copy or not. You have a complete defence if what is published is true, so long as you can actually prove this in court. However, this may be difficult so the safe rule is to be very careful before you publish an attack on a person's character.

You also have a defence (called "fair comment") which allows you to comment upon matters of general public concern, and express opinion and voice criticism upon matters. To come within this defence, you must confine your opinion to matters which are of concern and interest to the public generally, and normally a person's private character is not of public interest. You must also avoid making false factual statements; the law allows you to express your opinions, but not to tell untruths. However, there is nothing against your expressing your opinions on matters of public concern in a vigorous way, though if you express them in an indecent way then you must expect the court to doubt your good faith.

2. The Criminal Law of Obscenity

You can be fined or imprisoned if you publish obscene material, whether it takes the form of writing or pictures. Common sense is the best guide as to what the court is likely to regard as "obscene".

3. Comment on Judicial Proceedings

It is possible to commit an offence by commenting upon legal proceedings; it is prudent to seek advice before doing so.

4. University Regulations

- i. Junior Members are encouraged to publish, however, such publications shall be guided by the laws of the Land and the University.
- ii. No such publications shall target or seek to debase or humiliate any person or group(s) or person.

- iii. No supremacist (tribal, ethnic, sex, religion) publications shall be published in the University.
- iv. Persons or group(s) of persons who feel unduly targeted may initiate processes as provided by this Statute and any other regulations and laws.
